country is to be invaded or she needs her men to defend her against an enemy, or to uphold her; but these countries have the armies and are willing to fight this war to a victory, but they need munitions and food. They can't use many more troops than they already have, but they can use the food. So loyalty to our allies will be to feed their armies and starving people at home.

Pardon me, but I am worried about you at home. I would hate to see you go through what we are seeing here, and you don't need to if you start to guard against starvation. Prophecy teaches us that we are to have a famine, and we are on the verge of it. I have lost all my surplus flesh—about 12 pounds—and the president has lost 25 or more. That looks like it, doesn't it? (joke) My cold took all my fat off, but oh! such an appetite as I have now. I can't get enough to eat. We are just getting our green vegetables—radishes, asparagus, rhubarb, etc. New potatoes are selling at 28 cents per pound. What do you think about that? Could you imagine such a thing. We don't buy at such prices, not us. We will wait until they get to be 3 cents if they ever will. We are expecting a bread shortage soon. Everywhere you go are posters to the car windows, on the wind shields of autos, etc., "Eat Less Bread." They are trying every means they can to provide against the shortage of flour. Our baker told us the flour is made of oats, some little wheat, beans, corn, ground bone, rice, etc. One company was sued for putting sawdust in their bread. So you can see why I am anxious about planting all the crops you can.

Historic Places of Interest.

I must tell you about my trip. It was one of the best trips I have ever had in my life. I should say the best, for never before have I seen so much to interest me in so short a time. There were eight elders in our party, including President Richards, and on Monday after our conference we left Nottingham and all walked up to the Robin Hood caves, where the famous Robin Hood and his band of legendary outlaws escaped from the king and Normans. Saw the tournament groups spoken of in Ivanhoe, where Ivanhoe fought alone with the Black Knight; saw the underground tunnel through which they could go from the caves in the forest to the old castle, where the great battle was fought between the Sarons and Normans; saw Sherwood forest still standing, where Friar Tuck lived. In Nottingham the street "Robin Hood Chase," is along the trail where Robin Hood and band traveled back and forth to their caves and haunts in the forest. It is a crooked street and you are made to draw on your imagination about the days of long ago. We went through the castle and our guide told us the history of places and scenes where many crimes were committed that figured in ancient history in the days of Oliver Cromwell, etc. We spent all day looking over the places of interest in Nottingham and at 4:30 p. m. we took the train for London, arriving at 7:30 p. m. We saw many beautiful sights along our way. The weather was grand—just like our June days at home. The green meadows, bordered by green hedge rows, quiet little hamlets and villages every mile or so added to our interest and broke the monotony of train traveling. Farmers were in the fields, factories were belching forth great clouds of smoke from their towering smoke stacks; all interested us along our journey. Soon we were in the famous city of London and it is indeed a great city, covering an area of 37 miles square. People moving every way, in busses, street cars (trains) and with every conceivable conveyance imaginable, from a donkey cart to an underground railway. We were dazed for a few minutes, but soon we regained our senses and started for the London conference headquarters, where the president and elders gave us a hearty welcome and furnished us a fine supper. Next morning President McKay outlined for us a program of sight-seeing, which was first to the famous London Tower, where all famous people who were royal prisoners were

Saw where Sir Walter Raleigh was imprisoned for many years; where Queen Mary was beheaded and many places too numerous to mention in this hurried epistle. I will tell you the rest when I come home, if we ever can get back. Then we went out along the famous tower bridge—walked along the bank of the Thames River and crossed over the London bridge. Then we went up into the busiest center of the town and took a buss for Madame Tussard's famous wax works. I never saw anything so life like in this line before. If you didn't watch yourself you might be found talking to some of the wax figures. They have President Wilson, some of England's famous statesmen of today, Loyd George, Asquith, also the Kaiser of Germany, besides hundreds of other figures of famous kings and queens, writers, inventors, etc. Then we went to the show. Next day we visited the zoological gardens, where all kinds of animals are kept. Then we came back to Piccadilly circus (a street corner, and the busiest corner in England. There must be eight or ten vehicles pass every second. You sure have to watch yourself in crossing the street or you will get caught between two automobiles. Another theatre at night. Next day we went through a museum where were on exhibition prehistoric skeletons of Saurians, 86 feet in length and fourteen feet high; a large elephant 11 feet high and many other great things. From here we came back into the center of the city and called upon an American store—one of the biggest business establishments in London; went upon the roof where many people were gathered to look over the city and also were served with ice cream—the first we have had since coming to England. They can't make ice cream here like we have at home. It did seem a treat to have some real ice cream again. We then walked down along the famous promenade "Embankment," where the aristocrats get out and walk, which is along the bank of the Thames. We were very much interested in a stone column that was brought from Egypt and which was constructed or carved by Cleopatra, the famous queen of Egypt, 11 B. C.

We then visited the exterior of the House of Parliament; thence to the Buckingham palace, the home of the King, and walked through the famous Hyde park and to Rotten Row, where all the aristocrats were horse-back riding. All kinds of horses were on exhibition. I should like to have had "Cheyenne" at her best and have ridden along by some of those swell girls. They sure have some riding habits. I may have won for me a home, but you can't get into the aristocratic families here so easily—they are very seclusive and reserved (cold.) Another show at night. President McKay took us this day and showed us through Westminster Abbey. We also called upon the American Consul and received papers from him to attend Parliament and spent the afternoon listening to the debates; then we went to the park again, and then to a theatre. Next day, (Saturday) we took a bus ride to the suburbs of the city, about fifteen miles, and saw the Crippl Palace and then to town, where we again went to the park, it being one of the big days as Saturday afternoon is a half holiday. Thousands upon thousands of people were there—good and bad, worldliness and dissipation were in evidence. I am thankful that I was raised where a greater price was placed upon morality and virtue.

Where Valuables Are Unsafe.

Sunday morning we all went down to Petticoat Lane—the famous Jew market of London. The Jews observe Saturday as the Sabbath, and I never saw such a jaw in my life. You can buy anything you want here, from a needle to an automobile. We were instructed to leave all our money and valuables home, for they guarantee to steal your watch at one end of the street and sell it to you at the other. Thousands of people were there purchasing, too. I never saw anything I wanted except a few post cards.

In the afternoon I attended church. It was certainly a relief to leave the world for a few hours and worship God. Monday we went to town. I went through Westminster Abbey alone as President Laird, Hooper and Robins didn't care to go. I spent all morning musing and thinking about this ancient cathedral of which Washington Irving gives such a good description. I took the underground railway for the station where we were to leave for home and as luck would have it, my fellow elders were on the same tube, or train, after having been separated from them for about five hours in the big city of London. After I had seen the Abbey I thought I would take a last look at some of the busy centers alone. We returned home Monday night and were not back long when we received the sad news from Walsall that one of our local elders had got caught in the belting and was killed. He went around at the rate of three hundred revolutions throwing the flesh off his bones and scattering it all over the room—an awful thing. We went to attend the funeral, where I had to give a talk and at the grave Elder Evans and I sang "O Grave, Where is Thy Victory."

So you will pardon me for not writing earlier, but from now on I will be prompt, as I have been in the past. May God bless you and prosper you—keep you safe from harm—permit you all to live in peace and love, I am as ever, Your loving son and brother, HERBERT P. HAIGHT.
